BENEFITS OF ANTIOXIDANT RESPONSE

This is a very powerful anti-inflammatory formula. Inflammation is a natural response to stress and a primary defense mechanism by the body in the ongoing fight against pathogens. Pathogens are something most everyone is aware of today...especially in the form of bacteria...thus the many anti-bacterial products available on the market and in use today.

Stress, however, is a definite cause of inflammation as well...but it gets much less attention. Stress can result from the environment, our lifestyle, the foods we eat, and even our emotions or feelings and thoughts.

Although stress is necessary for survival, and it is a natural part of the healing process, many people do not understand it. They believe that inflammation is the same thing as infection, but this isn't correct. Inflammation is the natural response of trying to eliminate injurious stimuli and begin the healing process. There are many things involved in this process but a few include increased blood flow, increased temperature, immune system cells coming to the rescue to fight the infection and carry off dead cells and waste materials, followed by cells that repair, replace and strengthen damaged tissue. An infection, on the other hand, is an invasion by a pathogen in the body. Infections trigger inflammation.

While our survival depends on our ability to respond to injuries with acute inflammation, it is the chronic inflammation that leads to accelerated aging of tissues, disease and premature death. Chronic inflammation can become out-of-control and makes constant tissue destruction and remodeling take place.

Chronic inflammation that continues over a period of time can result in fibrosis, or the formation of scar tissue. Fibrosis destroys organs. It causes normal tissues to be replaced with scar-like structures. It creates obstructions that hinder circulation and drainage in lymph tissues and blood vessels. When these areas are cut off from proper blood and lymph, infectious toxic waste develops which leads to more serious infections and further destruction of tissues.
